College Life: Alomevorle Ganes Concents Work Outs Naps Walks Traditions Parties Friends

Tradition. PAWS (Pairing Alumni With Students) member Steve Devore, participates in the annual painting of the ' N ' on September 13th. The painting of the ' N ' has been a Welcome Week tradition for decades.

Time Out. Sitting around at the Honors Welcome Barbeque, Honors students re-establish contacts with old friends, meet new ones and hang out. There were many activities during the first weeks of school for students from all walks of life and with diversified interests.

Right On! An incoming student, and participant at Traditions, gets the rope perfectly over the head of the steer. The day before classes began for the Fall Semester, several organizations including the Alumni Association, Paring Alumni With Students (PAWS), and ASUN's Flipside Productions, welcomed incoming freshmen and transfer students to the university. At Traditions, each participant was given a T-shirt with a colored dot on the inside tag. According to the color, students were divided into teams and competed in games Several events were set up for the competition and the teams went through each event twice.

Symbolizing Excellence. Morrill Hall stands at the end of the Quad reminding students, faculty and visitors of where the University started and how far it has come. Morrill Hall was the only building on eampus until the expansion began.

A New Look. The newly renovated JTSU welcomed students to the 199697 school year. The project started in the summer of 1995 and was completed in February of 1996. The construction caused some frustration and delays, however it produced results many felt were worth the wait. The funds for this project came from Bookstore revenues saved over many years. The final interior was indistinguishahle from the original.

Summer Colors. Looking down on the business quad from the top of the outer stairs of the Ansari Business Building provides a vicw of the blossoming flowers as well as the Reynolds School of Journalism, the construction of the new Education Building, and The l ecture Building. The Quad had just becn renovated the year before to include new benches and tables, a shuttle stop, and new landseaping.

Campuse

Picturesque. The Manzanita Bowl is a place of activitics. "Bands In the Bowl" was only one cxample It was also used as a hang out for people on their lunch-breaks, frisbee games in-between classes, and sometimes as a place of relaxation before and after classes.

Wishing Well? The fountain behind Manzanita and Juniper Halls is not only decorative, but it also keeps Manzanita lake from freezing over. At the beginning of the century,
Manzanita Lake was a popular ice-skating spot, however the current fountain docsn't allow it to freeze cnough to ice-skate safely

$lomecoming!

Bash those Aggies! Standing in as the opposition for the homecoming game, the scarecrows serve as the brunt of the 'Bash the Aggies' activity. Many students showed up for their chance to knock the Aggies over with fruit

Pay Attention! Waiting for their next move to be called out, participants of the 'Creamy Twister' crouch in their awkward positions. The activities were put on by Flipside Productions, the programming board of Associated Students of the University of Nevada.

In Sync. The University Marching Band dazzles parade watchers as it slowly makes its way through the streets. Directcd by Dr. "Mack" McGrannahan, the marching band was featured in all home football games during half-time and the parade.

Love me! Students representing various groups on campus participate in the traditional 'Dating Game' during homecoming week festivities. Unlikc other activities, the prize for this game was something they could take home to mom and dad

Baneen with

Roughing it. Alumni Director Mike Davis kicks off homecoming week with a campout outside the Jot Travis
Student Union. Students took the cue and were seen doing crazy things all over eampus throughout the week.

Get Down Tonight! Performing 'Wolves Frolic' in the auditorium, these gentlemen show off their moves. Homecoming week was full of fun and laughter as teams competed. Many of the challenges and games were performed in front of on-lookers and took courage to complete. These gentlemen rose to the challenge.

Whose Broad Stripes and Bright Stars... The Ameriean flag is presented on Virginia Street during the Homecoming parade. Many different organizations were featured in the parade before the big game.
Royalty. The King and Oucen, Mark Summers and Christic Corscy, are lailed atter being erowned at the game. Their group gathered the most cans of food for the canned food drive.

HIKE! Getting ready to snap the ball to Eric Bennett, a Quarterback for the Wolfpack, Jeff Hadwick, the Center, waits for Bennett's signal. Bennett was a junior, studying recreation and Hadwick was a senior, studying geography

You're goin' down! Not allowing more than seven yards on the kick return, Mike Crawford and Aaron Lozano are all over the receiver. If a 'fair catch' was called, the defense had to give the receiver two feet in which to catch the ball and were not allowed to tackle him. But, in instances where no call was made, the receiver was 'fair game

Almost there! Getting tackled just short of the goal line, Geoff Noisy holds onto the ball and pushes for more yards. Holding the ball to their chests was the best way for players to ensure not to fumble and turn the ball over to the other team.

I'mopen! Waiting for his chance to score, Molech Blythe tries to ge away from the UNLV player in order to catch the ball without much resistance. Blythe was a junior studying human ccology. The Wolfpack won the game with a final score of 54-17.

Rum Away! Trying to avoid a sack while looking for an open receiver and keeping the ball away from the advancing Montana

Thagends ofll

 State player, John Dutton, a Quarterback, makes a run for it. Being able to find the holes and avoid the defensive ends was almost as important as being able to throw the ball.

Oh No You Don't! Taking to the outside. Running Back Ernie Wilson skirts around the defensive members of the opposing team. Depending on other offensive players for blocking and holes in the defense, receivers also had to be light on their feet and quick in their reflexes in order to avoid the onslaught of attacking players.

Here They Come... Breaking through the blue smoke, the Wolfpaek receives a warm welcome from the home crowd. The cheers were an important boost for the team at all of their home games. Playing in Mackay Stadium was a privilege and a pleasure for both the team and its fans. The blue smoke was a tradition as was the firing of the cammon when a touchdown was scored.

Liftoff! Psyching herself out for the stunt, this cheerleader prepares to be propetled high into the air The cheerleaders could be seen flying above the track throughout home games as well as performing tumbling lines and general spirit raising activities.

GO BIG BLLE: Holding up the last word of the sequence for the "Zonies," Brent Reager stirs up the crowd with the support of the tubas and his other teammates. Cheering was expected and ejoyed by all at home games.

N-E-V-A-D-A... Pausing before a cheer to ensure uniformity, the cheerleaders look at each other for cues. Timing and accuracy were important to the team. In order to look thier best and represent the university in the best way possible, the team had to look sharp in their cheers, dances, and stunts.

Nrousayta!

Tuba, Tuba! Playing to the fans in the end Zone at the University of Nevada-Montana State University game, the tuba players rile the fans and students. It was tradition for the tubas to play at each game and occasionally at big away games. The crowd was often a factor in the attitudes of the players on the field; the players often signaled for the crowd to increase its noise level during certain plays.

On The Prowl. Making his rounds as usual, Wolfic entertains and interacts with the fans. students. and checrleaders. A popular altraction for children. Wollie's time was often monopolized by young adoring fans. Wolfic was an entertaining tradition at all of the home games.

Zonies! Decked out in their University of Nevada paraphernalia, citizens of Reno come out to support the local team. Adnission was firce for students of the university with a valid ID, howeser locals had purchased their tickets. The price of the tickets was around $$ 10$, but it didn't scem to bother many "Renoites"

Could We Get a Statement? Being interviewed by Channel 8, these guys get air time. Hundreds of people were expected every Saturday before the games in Mackay stadium. Radio stations, television stations and many other community organizations showed up for the festivities.

Jam Packed. Truck loads of people show up for the tailgaiting before the game. People came to drink, listen to music, and enjoy the sunshine before going into the stadium to watch the game. A parking spot could rarely be found after ten o'clock in the morning.

Pit Stop! Standing in line for the bathroom, these fans wait their turn. Having to use a port-a-potty seemed to not faze many tailgators. For many, having a good time, drinking and hanging out outwcighed the cost of having to use these facilities
Mmmm... Enjoying some of the snacks offered by tailgators, these two guys watch the grill. There was plenty of food, drinks and fun for all who chose to join in the pre-game celebrations

Tu'sumey

Comfly? The bed of a truck was a great place to enjoy a drink and hang out while waiting for the game to begin. Pick-ups were the most common vehicle seen in the parking lot for tailgating because of the convenience of the multiple seating in the back. The warm weather was an added bonus for tailgators of all ages.

Grab al seat! The beds of trucks and car seats weren't the only places to take a load off while tailgaiting in the parking lot. Many different types of seating could be found scattered all over the lot between automobiles and crowds of friends and fellow tailgators. Lawn chairs, couches, and clothing were just a few makeshift seats.

Hey Guys! Mceting up with fricnds in the parking lot posed a challenge for many as they tried to find their way through the crowds Most tailgators wont with the friends they planned to spend the day with and then just made their rounds looking for people they knew.

Center of Altention. The JTSU (Jot Travis Student Union) offers many services to students of the University. Some of those services include a computer lab, a game room with everything from air hockey to pool, meeting rooms, a lounge, and a study/lccture hall. It also houses the offices of the ASUN (Associated Students of the University of Nevada) and the GSA (Graduate Student Association).

Down Under. The computer den, the bookstore, the cellar, and the Wolf's Den are all located on the bottom floor of the Jot Travis Student Union.

Ilelp!! The JTSU computer lab is open to all students of the University and employs students to assist uscrs with problems or questions. It enabled students to check their e-mail, acccss the Internet, and type papers. The printing was frec up to the first 20 pages and only ten cents per page after that.

Relax! The lounge in the entryway of the JTSU provided students with a place to hang out in between classes, meet before events or activities, and sometimes catch a few zzz's. The lounge was just one of the many new rooms gained by the construction.

Inivey and ed

Shhhh... The pine lounge gave students a place to sit around and do homework, socialize, play cards, play the piano and participate in many other activities. The lounge was also used as a lecture hall for special prescntations and as a movie theatre for frce movies sponsored by the JTSU. Sturlents could be found there from the minute the doors opened until closing. There were two levels of the lounge which helped with crowding and views of the stage. The balcony had stairs as well as an elevator for the handicapped giving all students access to it The lounge itself was located right across from the JTSU Information Desk.

A Fork In The Road. Thrce computers are set up in the hallway for students to use for checking e-mail. Often, if the computer lab down the hall was full. students waited in the hall to check their e-mail. 'There werc two hallways on each side of this computer outlet: one going to Virginia Strect the other going to the meeting halls and Crossroads

Died

Food, Fun and Fellowship. Sharing lunchtime, these students gather between their classes to get a quick bite to eat. No matter how hectic schedules got, there was always time to take a food break. Students often found ways to study and eat at the same time, enabling them to get nourishment and keep up on school work.

Piping Hot. Serving up the meat, these two chefs work together to provide a hot meal. Students were able to choose between many different kinds of food all over campus. These included Crossroads, the Cellar, the Wolf's Den, Carlos Peppers the snack bar in the Education building, as well as the numerous vending machines around campus.

Suack Time! New to the University campus the snack stand offers students a quick alternative to sitting down to a meal. They served Nachos, ice cream, pretzels, hot dogs soup, sodas, and many other food itcms.

Health Food! Waiting in line for the salad bar, students grab a healthy meal to keep them going. Many students looked for a healthy alternative among the many junk food choices.

Hicky Eater. Picking out what she wants, this student rakes sure she takes only what she will eat. Many ast food places did not allow students to be ehoosy, o a self-serve bar was a nice change for many.

Self-Serve Fast Food? Pieking out their meals from the bar, these students move quiekly through. Food bars were a popular alternative to fast food.

Grab a Bite. These three friends take time to eat with each other. Meeting for lunch was one of the ways to keep in touch with friends that were not in classes together Cram! Killing two birds with one stone, Steve Wathen does his studying while cating. Students could often be secn doing this because of their hectie sehedules Taking time out to eat was sometimes out of the question.

Smoke Break. Dave Thomas, Jennifer Wilson, Julie Steîneamp, and Astrida Salmins sit on the steps outside for a quick ehange of seenery in thier casual attire. Many students dressed down for classes seeing no need to sit around all day in niee clothing.

Generation GAP. Amber Carone Elizabeth Helal, Naney Knechel, and Levi Kryder are coordinated in their attire with the "jeans and $t$-shirt" look. Many students seemed to mateh in their clothes, although all added their own personal touch. A popular trend among students was to wear brand name elothing from major clothing distributors

Put Your Right Foot In... Putting thier feet forward, students with all different kinds of shoes show off thier own style. The styles ranged from Birkenstoeks to Saddle Shoes all over campus depending on the weather and preferences of the person wearing the shoes

Sltasashionent

On a Roll. Devin Zegers and Nolan Morache earry their skateboards with them everywhere they $g_{0}$. Not only were the boards a great method of transportation, they were also a fashion statement. "Skaters" were eonsidered to have a fashion of their own.

Body Art. Sporting his tatoos, Josh Riley hangs out in the parking lot. Piercings, tatoos and new age jewelry were the trend both on and off campus. The fashions of clothing could be changed in a day, however the body art made a more permanent statement.

Lady In Red. Lesley Wilkerson shows off her hair color to friends of hers as well as all students on campus. Tattoos were permanent, body piereings were partially permanent, but hair coloring was an interchangable style that was popular in the 80 's and made a come-back late in the 90 's.

Ar Thme. Giving a new meaning to the word flight, A student completes his stunt with total concentration. Finding time to do the things they loved was often as important to some students as getting work for classes accomplished.

TWO? Kceping his cyes on the Frisbee, Matt Scholtz maneuvers his way into its path. The Quad was often filled with people enioying time out of class with friends and new acquaintances on days when the weather cooperated Gellin' On My Groove. Jamming to the tunes from the "Bands in the Bowl", students dance with their peers. There was no style of dancing that was not accepted as long as no one invaded anyone else's space. The popular dance of the year was the "Macarena" and body surfing was a popular activity in a crowd of dancers.

Boys on the Side. Enioying an aftemoon in the shade from the Nevada sun, these three friends enioy each other's company. Taking time out for social activities was an cssential part of the college schedule.

Hfull Of ir

Dawn Patrol. Taking the lead in the wave of hot air ballons, the dawn patrol lights up against the dark morning sky. Just before dawn, these ballons provided light for those early birds attending the races.

Overhead. Flying high above the campus and the statue of John W. Maekay, the ballons display ther manuvering ability. The statue was rededieated in the Spring of 1996. In attendanee wcre descendents of John and other members of the Maekay family. John Maekay was one of the first to start the expansion of the campus and the sehool.

Piggy Bank. Hovering over the eity, the ballons fill the sky with vibrant colors and many photographic opportunities. Balloons of many different colors and sizes could be seen. There were a few balloons with unique shapes that caught the eye.

Nbove AII. The University of Nevada balloon flies high above the rest. There were balloons from all over the eountry and the state that eame to compete in the races. The balloons had to stay a good distanee away from each other in order to avoid collisions and dangerous situations

Just Wakin' Lp! The balloon is ready to go bright and early. In order for a hot air balloon to fly, the temperature outside the balloon has to be colder than the temperature inside. Therefore, most ballooners prepared before daylight in order to take off just as the sun was rising. However. most balloons (except for the dawn patrol) wated for the sun to rise in order to have better visability.

Propeller. The helicopter, called a Chinook, proves to be a sight as it gives a demonstration about how to put out wildfires. The suspended container released water in order to give a visual

Scatter! The Canadian
Snowbirds shoot into the air Many such formations and stunts were seen throughout the day for the enjoyment of the crowds.

Follow The Leader. Flying in a nine-plane format, the planes sweep over the crowd. Although there were trophies and prizes to be won, the pilots were also there to entertain and have fun. The Canadian Snowbirds were the main attraction as they are considered to be, by many, some of the best stunt pilots in the world.

Hooked! 'The observers of the Air Races are privy to a rare occurance. As the Nary Seal parachuters attempted to separate from a stack formation (one above the other, fect on shoulders), they became hooked.

Danger

Smooth Landing. A parachuter participates in the show. The national colors, displayed by his parachute, were a common site in many of the festivies.
Stealth. The legendary Stealth Bomber makes an appearance at the 1996 Air Races in Stead, Nevada. Every ycar, Stead hosts Air Race events in September.

Enterttainment

Belly Dancing. Student Trina Steljes performs an Egyptian Belly Dance at the Crossroads Dining Hall during multicultural month.

Free? Douglas Walls plays the role of Pseudolus and Andrea Cozzens plays the role of Gymnasia in the Nevada Repertory Company's fall production of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum.

The Bands Not In The Bowl. The Lazy Eights perform a rained out concert in the auditorium. Although they performed as part of the September "Bands In the Bowl" series, inclement weather forced them to perform inside rather than the Bowl. However, the appreciative crowd was not deterred.

Mellow. Flipside Productions brought Chocolate Honey
Monkey to the pine lounge in October for sturents to enioy ancin' In the Auditorium. 'Two students dance to the lusic of the Lazy Eights. The band played in the uditorium due to to rainy weather, but this did not ampen the spirits of the crowd.

The Jand Played Ori. Students enjoy dancing to the music of Sucka Punch. This was one roncert of the Bands in the Bowl sevies that actually had a chance to play outdoors.

And They Danced! MultiCultural Month, October, was kicked off by a many-cultured dance exhibition in the pine Lounge. Audience members gained first-hand knowledge of these cultures by participating in their dances

Dinner and Dancing. During one of the many themed dinners at the Crossroads, Latin dancers display their ritual dances. This was just one of the many programs included in the MultiCultural Month festivities that exposed students to new cultures.

Proud of Our Culture. Dancers from two cultures, Hawaiian and Native American, participate in the Multi-Cultural Month opening festivities.

Summer Spirit. At a home game, the "Pride of the Sierras' plays for a packed stadium of fans. The U of N band performed many different songs and routines during the season providing constant variety.

In Formation. The flag team performs for spectators at the Homecoming parade. The flag team is just one of many organizations at the University of Nevada that tries to raise school spirit

Sportin' Stripes. The University Pep Band performs at a home basketball game. The band members were easily identified by their striped uniform shirts

Marching In Siyle
The Marching Band is seen by many as members perform for the spectators of the 1996 Homecoming Parade.

Concentration! The
Pep Band is seen playing for the spectarors at a Wolf Pack Basketball game. The band plays an important role in raising spirits during games.

Letter From the President

The 96-97 term as ASUN President has been one of the major challenges of my life. I would first like to thank everyone who placed their faith in me and my ideas. I sincerely hope my efforts have met your expectations. The current state of ASUN, as I see it, is as bright as ever.

As a student organization, we are in the highly enviable situation of existing in an environment in which 100 years of fine leadership have fostered working relationships as open and productive as any student government enjoys with any faculty and administration in the nation. Regardless of that fact, throughout ASUN the issue of improving communication has been important, and we have employed advanced technology to this end. One of our greatest challenges this year has been to make the lines of communication between the general student body and the university administration as accessible as it is for student leaders. First, we purchased a web server to allow ASUN and ASUN recognized clubs and organizations to maintain their own web pages. Second, we have moved toward club e-mail boxes to better communication between ASUN officers, administrators, and club officers.
This year we moved to engage more students in the election process both on campus and in society as a whole. The campus election in 1997 for the first time in many years included a student initiative question to help excite students to turn out for the campus election. In voter participation efforts outside the University, the first recommendation of the 1996-97 ASUN Senate was to ask the Board of Regents and the Secretary of State's office to designate the schools of the University and Community College System of Nevada (UCCSN) as special registrars of voters. This designation will allow students to register to vote without leaving campus, and it will hopefully result in greater voter involvement by those who benefit most from higher ed-ucation- students.

Finally, this was the first year we were able to occupy the newly renovated Jot Iravis Student Union. The renovation was paid for primarily out of profits from the ASUN Bookstore. The $$ 1,000,000$ allocation created a social center for the campus. A focus sadly missing in years past and an investment which will undoubtedly pay-off for years to come. This project demonstrates that the visionary leadership which has characterized ASUN for so many years actually does create major impact on students' lives. The renovation is just the type of multi-generational goal we allude to in our new mission statement drafted by the $96-97$ senate.

Again, ASUN has provided me with four of the best years of leadership experience of which any individual could dream. I thank every student who allowed me this experience. I hope future students of every conceivable background will enjoy sharing the experience of ASUN with the students of the University of Nevada, Reno.

An enthusiastic but weary "Hola!" from the group of ambitious Hedonist-types known as Flipside Productions. We might be referred to as the campus burger-Flippers, the Flippers-off of all work and no play, or simply the Flipped-catty-wompus component to your student government machine.
In layman's terms, we're the ones who worked clumsily this year to bring you live music amidst temperate summer breezes in the Manzanita Bowl, all you ever wanted to know about serial killers from an admitted expert, a less than G-rated Norm MacDonald straight off "The Weekend Update," some free grub, cheep-o ski tickets for Winter Carnival, and maybe a South African rhythm or two.

We watched with you as a $\mathbf{U}$ of N football player turned into a sprinkler under some hypno-action from one Bruce MacDonald, Master Hypnotist. We blitzkrieged unassuming Aggies with week-old fruit and vegetables, listened to music on the steps of the library, dished out free sundaes, disco-danced, dropped our pants (oh, that was last year)- and all for you, our studious contemporaries. We are not so bold as to say that all of you enjoyed these events as much as we did, but we hope that we were able to break the drone melody of semestral existence in some small yet poignant way.

So neighbors- your mission, if you choose to accept it, is to take advantage of US! Use us, abuse us, give us your ideas, give us your tastes, give us some feedback. Eat the food, drink the drink, listen to the good and bad music, laugh at our jokes. Long after this year's crop of Hedonists is gone, y'all will hold the conch for the rest of us. "Adios-adios-ciao!"

Letter From the Editor

The Sagebrush has endured over 100 trying school years, and my year as editor has seen tribulations no different than any other year. The deadlines, the late - oh so freakin' late - nights, sustained only through heinous use of colas, slurpees, and junk food (along with the occasional scrumptious snacks from various respective girlfriends), were but one of many markers of drudgery within the world of print journalism.

But, like any yearbook, I'm going to reflect on those times that made our year unique and great. For instance, I believe the Sagebrush was pivotal (thanks to the beautiful and scathing rhetoric of Opinion Editor Deidre Pike and the witty artistry of Jody Lindke) in the election of one of the few, real student representatives. Faculty member and current (as of January 7) regent Howard Rosenberg defeated the well-funded, powerfully backed Mary McMullen by about 800 votes. Whether or not Rosenberg keeps the seat on the board in the face of mysteriously disgruntled University officials remains to be seen. A maverick's path to greatness was never straight and easy.

Our year also saw the usual fce increases, one of which was a 900 percent increase in the late fee charges from a maximum of $$ 25$ to a max of $$ 250$. Being fulure yuppies who couldn't give a damn about expenditures under $$ 5,000$, we, the students, accepted this without a word (but not the Sagebrush of coursc).

Internally, the Sagebrush was staffed for success. The sports pages, run by the gung-ho, bitchin' bros Brock and Jace Radke, saw its only imperfections put there by myself. Good job, guys. The Opinion pages were always entertaining, due to the talent of the soon-to-bc-a-part-of-some-big-ass-publication Deidre Pike. She could easily handle any part of the Sagebrush. Janine Simonoski improved the Variety pages every issue, and has turned it into a great section. News, the most difficult monster to tame within the Sagebrush jungle, was handled by Marcia Rohrer in the first semester. She definitely had her hands full, and if anyone asks, "Welcome Students!" was my idea.

The two guys who were there with me until the bitter end every production night were Photographer Editor Wally Giller and Production Manager Brian Felgar. Wally is a fantastic photographer his pics stun me continually - but a lousy Maelstrom player. Brian, along with cranking out a good lookin' paper, kept us entertained night after night (and that doesn't include the dancing!)

It's been a great year, and 1 am honored to work for this line -publication. It was a trying, learning, and quitc a fultilling experience. I wouldn't give it up for anything. Have a good life.

Sitling Up In Her Room. Making a comfortable home away from home was a necessity for all students who lived on campus. Michelle Capen displays her individuality in her room at Manazita Hall with a zoo animal theme.

We're Hungry! Long lines each evening are common occurences at the Crossroads. Residents often rushed over for their last opportunity to grab some nourishment before a long night of playing or studying.

Pool Shark. Jeremy Woodgate plays a game of pool with other residents of Lincoln Hall. Pool was one of many recreational activities available at the residents halls in the evenings and during the weekends.

"Moving into the residence halls was exciting, challenging, and drepressing all at the same time. You must pack all of your stuff up and try to fit it all in your vehicle, but you can't take everything because your room will be much smaller and you must share it. Overall, it is a fun adventure because you are on your own and can make your own decisions,'" comments Shauna Thueson, a third year returning student to the residents halls.
Many students agree with Nye Hall resident Erica Stover, that they chose to move into the dorms "to get the full college experience." What is this "full college experience" that everyone talks about? According to Neelima Bedi, "I have entered a whole new world." This whole new world means living away from home, experiencing new freedoms, and knowing that everyday will be exciting.
The places students come from are as far away as another country, or as close as Reno and adjacent cities. This diversity gives everyone who lives on campus a chance to meet a variety of people, understand other cultures, and make new friends.
With the shock of being away from home comes the dilema every student faces; missing, as Adam Hoelzer says, "my mother's cooking." Even though the problem of homesickness is present, the University does its best to cure the hunger of its residents by offering some of the most flexible, affordable, and enjoyable dining around. The dining commons which most residents use on a daily basis, called The Crossroads, offers students extremely friendly service and good-tasting food. "Two of my favorite things at the Crossroads are breakfast and the cookies," comments Shauna Thueson.
Students enjoy their newly-found freedoms while living on campus. Erica Stover says, "my day usually begins whenever I can roll out of bed." Licoln Hall resident Robert Wilson also likes the ability to roll out of bed whenever he feels like it. "I like living on campus because it makes getting to class easier when you wake up late," he remarks. But with these new freedoms come some responsiblities. For example, the task of doing ones laundry frequently enough so one can have clean clothes, and the necessity to keep up with seemingly never-ending homework constantly nag in the back of a resident's mind.

With the homework done, or maybe not, students enjoy many activities that the resident hall facilities provide. Each month Crossroads spices things up by providing theme nights such as the "Rock and Roll Soda Shop." Each hall on campus also plans major social events. A few of these that occured during the 1996-1997 year were Juniper Hall's "Club Juniper", and the traditional "Lincoln Hall Haunted House." The Resident Assistants, who have the daunting task of making sure their floor does not resort to chaos and anarchy. also help to get the residents involved by planning activities which become fun and educational forums for meeting people.
As they head home at the closing of this year, many residents will walk away remembering the many wonderful exporiences they had while living on campus. When one resident was asked if he will return next year to live on campus, Manhew Free said, "Without a doubt, yes!"

Welcome to the Dining Commons! Through the entrance of the Crossroads students get their first glimpse of what is on the menu.

Try This. Becky Green and Jen Reid carefully survey their choices before deciding what will satify their hunger The dining commons provides a variety of food each day to please its patrons

I Love Good Service. Kate Slabach smiles with pleasure as she receives a speedy check-in from Crossroad worker Marylin.

A Place to Call

 Home. A large portion, close to five hundred, of the University of Nevada's residents, live in the eight-story building of Nye Hall.What Did You Say? Hope Collins asks her friend, Lai Lum, to repeat the ioke's punchline as Lai laughs.

Got Change? Dwayne Palos searches his pockets to find enough quarters to pay for drying his laundry. Many residents moving into the hall had to learn how to do their own laundry.

Up to Something. Claudia Agyuayo tries to keep from laughing with friends at what appears on her computer screen.

Dinner and a Game. Taking time out from their ehess game, residents John Williams and Pete Trauth enjoy an evening snack of McDonald's hamburgers and milk Cooking? Ray Spencer and Lovie Melnick cook dinner on the stove. The apartment-like rooms of Canada include a kitchen where residents have the freedom of preparing thcir own meals.

How Much? Leanne Maitland prepares her clothes for a wash cycle by measuring detergent into the premeasured scoop

What a Night! Taking it casy from aut cventfull evening, Justine Gatus, Will Ginyard, Danielle Freimuth, and Joe Sillitoe relax in a living room area of one of the Canada Hall suites.

Working on the Homework. Nate Atcheson and Frankie Vigil work together on a projeet for class.

Loungin'. Nate Wyatt relaxes in his Juniper Hall room with his trusty remote control.

Clean Clothes! Juniper residents tackle the duty of laundry.

Did You Understand? Friends Ericka Barton and Erin Hoffman have an evening conversation at the front desk of Juniper Hall about the material covered in the class they share.

Atached... To Manzanita Hall on North Virginia Street, Juniper Hall is home to many residents at the University of Nevada.

Welcome to White Pine! Some of the fourth floor residents at White Pine stand on their balcony. The balconies at White Pine are one of the major advantages of living in the hall. Aside from being a hangout place, the balcony also gives the residents a scenic view of campus and downtown Reno.

Sing Us a Song! Adam Golden entertains fellow residents with his guitar. Residents often share their talents with each other to pass the time

An Evening at the Theatre. Just begining "The Three Theban Plays" by Sophocles, Lisa Ethridge plans to spend the night reading for her Western Traditions class. White Pine suites have a common area between four rooms which is not only used for recreational activitics but also for studying.

nnyone Out There? Katic Kring works on her computer from the privacy of her oom. Many residents have the ability to surf the internet from their rooms in ddition to using the traditional word processing on their computers Knock Out. Mike Tjaden and Jeff Mitler play a round of video games while munching on Carl's Jr. from the Wolf's Den in their "party room.

Trouble... Again? The Reno Fire Department pays White Pine a visit. no, the firemen weren't handing out candy eanes Study Session. Pooling their knowledge, Kristia Stantey, Tony Cetests, Jeff Vitense, and Julis Cuenca work Logether to complete the material nccessary for their next test. The "fish bowl" is a lavorite place for White l'ine residents who go there to study, play the piano, and hang out with friends.

Safety First. As part of the core requirements, most students have to take at least one science class with a lab section. Within these lab classes, students not only learn how scientists work and solve problems, but they also learn safety precautions.

Pillar of Strength. The John William Mackay statue is one of the longest-standing structures on campus. Mackay is remembered for his large contributions to the University in its infancy which helped the school grow into the campus we know today.

Crossroads of Learning. The Lower Quad is one of the main crossroads on campus that students travel through on their way to classes in various fields of study. The construction of the new education building added to the skyline this year.

Since the first (bachelor of arts) degree was awarded at the University of Nevada in 1891, the University has offered a wide variety of undergraduate and graduate programs, including selected doctoral and professional studies, which have progressed with the times. Within the University there are nine academic colleges which combined offer nearly 100 different areas of study.

Many students enter the University with an idea of what they hope their future profession will be. To meet their future goal, students select a major that best matches their interests. Students choose majors in order to either provide a service to the community or to understand the workings of the world around them. Mariane Farjallah, who is more community service oriented, has chosen her major of Pre-Dentistry because she would like to "give people the confidence to smile." Meanwhile, Elaine Yap chose the major of Physical Education in order to "be more informed on how the human body functions and how physical activity affects it." Regardless of the reasons students choose their majors, often the selection they make will determine their future.

Although many students clearly invision their future careers, others do not. Heather Clotworthy and Kelly Ellsworth have been interested in their major areas of study since childhood. In contrast, there are many students, such as Katie IIudrlik who still have not declared a major.

Students do not embark on the journey of higher education alone. The University provides a large faculty to help students not only learn but also guide them towards their future. Both Aaron DeHart and Jason Young feel that the staff on campus is meeting their needs. Jason Young states, "I feel the college staff is very educated and professional." Aaron Dehart agrees, "Most of the professors are cager to help and they enjoy watching the students learn."

The most important goal of every student is quite simply, to GRADUA'IE. It is said that an education is the key to success, and as such, students hope to be able to use their education for the rest of their lives. As History major Ethan Spod summarizes, "I hope to not only gain a solid education in my field of study, but I would like to gain a very diverse education that can be useful throughout my life."

As the Artemisia looks back upon the past academic year to record the significant events and achievements of 199697, I think not of the singular accomplishments of College of Arts and Science students and faculty - of which there are many - but of the connection you have as students at the University and as majors in the College of Arts and Science to a past long ago. In 1899, when the Artemisia was first published, the College of Arts and Science hired Jeanne Wier as associate professor of history. She had come to Nevada in 1897 to study the Washoe Indians. In 1907 she became head of the department, and thereafter, until her death in 1950, devoted herself to many causes. She was a leader in the suffragette movement in Nevada, played a major role in developing the history and political science departments at the University of Nevada, and helped found the Nevada Historical Society in 1904. She was perhaps best known in the community for her selfless dedication to preserving the history of Nevada.

Knowledge of the past and its influence on the present constitute an important part of a liberal arts and science education. I write of Professor Wier's life not only to inform you of an important historical firgure in Nevada history whose actions affect you today, but for another reason as well. As students who choose majors in the College of Arts and Science, you take classes which emphasize skills as relevant 100 years ago as they are today: the ability to communicate effectively, write clearly, use numbers competently, and, above all, think critically. In your future, these skills will be applied in technological and other areas we cannot even predict today, but in essence they remain as needed and as constant as they did in Professor Weir's time.

As students whose engagements will affect the 21st century, just as Professor Weir's affected the first half of the 20th century, you will be faced with many challenges. 1 am confident your liberal arts and science education will serve you well.

Agiriculiture

The College of Agriculture's on a roll. The school year began with new-studentwelcome and welcome-back barbecues hosted by Alpha Zeta, honorary Ag fraternity. In addition to Alpha Zeta, students joined the Rodeo Club, Preveterinary Medicine Club, Aggie Club, and Biochemistry Club.

New this year was a state-of-the-art computer laboratory with 30 on-line machines. The old computer lab continues to be open with expanded hours for student use.

To make sure Ag Education meets student needs, the College initiated a new major, Environmental Policy Analysis. Several new courses were added in the Departments of Environmental and Resource Science and Applied Economics and Statistics (formerly Agricultural Economics). These programs and others continue to grow in numbers and popularity.

In the last 10 years Ag College undergraduates have nearly doubled, from 259 students in 1987 to 504 in 1996, a period when university enrollment rose 20 percent. During the past five years when campus undergraduate numbers inched up 5 percent, the College of Agriculture shot up 39 percent. Our friendly and efficient Student Center headed by Rena Armstrong has a lot to do with that growth.

In addition to our strong recruitment and advising programs, our scholarship activity ranked second on campus in total dollar awards (more than $$ 85,000$ to students in 1996-97 alone).

The Ag College's student retention rate of 78 percent is more than the University's 73 percent of freshmen who returned to school in the fall of 1996. The key to retention is quality advising. Ninety-five percent of Ag's Environmental and Resource Sciences' alumni said in a 1996 survey the advising they received was good-to-excellent. Three out of four of those alumni said their advisors were not only readily available but also accurate.

We consider students the most important aspect of the University and we're more than willing to help you achieve success.

The last few years have been marked by national recognition at the Reynolds School of Journalism. For example, in fall 1996 the school recieved a $$ 150,000$ grant from the Knight Foundation to enhance its recruiting and retention program. The majority of the grant will go for scholarships while the remainder will be used to develop a program to keep more students at the university.
The Knight grant followed a strong review from a team from the Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communications in fall 1995. The team described the report this way:
"The school has a well-earned reputation for its dedication to teaching and advising students, particularly in professional skills. It has developed a special strength in critical thinking throughout the curriculum... The central administration and other academic units recognize the school as forward looking and innovative, particularly in developing the expertise of faculty, students and staff in applying new communication and information technologies in instruction and professional practice."

The accrediting team cited the "high quality" of instruction, "superb" facilities and "strong professional internship program." Official re-accreditation was granted in May 1996 and is good for six years.

The school is also emerging as a national resource for professional journalists. In the past year, we have co-hosted programs with the American Press Institute, the Maynard Institute and New Direction for News, three nationally known journalistic enterprises dedicated to furthering professional growth and exploring the future of mass communication.

We recently spent more than $$ 200,000$ to create a new multi-media computer center that will allow students to practice journalism on the Internet. The center will enable our students to explore - and shape the impact of digital technology on journalism.

Our curriculm continues to evolve. Our courses were recently revised to place a greater emphasis on critical thinking, ethics and visual communication. Several key courses have been revamped. And we're encouraging our students to take three interships during their college career rather than just one. Yet one aspect never changes: at the heart of the program remains the traditional focus of good writing and reporting for all students.

EADUCATION

This is an exciting time in the College of Education. In fall of 1997, the students, faculty and staff will be moving into one of the very finest state-of-the-art facilities in the country. The new 110,000 square foot College of Education building houses the finest electronic classrooms which will make instruction and learning come alive. All classrooms will have the capability for students to use their own laptop computers during instruction; the media to enhance instruction will be first class. The Learning and Resource Center's graphics, library and media center will be larger and have the latest equipment for all media areas. This center will benefit both students and faculty in preparing for their instruction, and make learning an enjoyable experience.

The new facility will also have a number of other centers that will make the college a hub of activity - such as a regional conference center, science and math center, educational policy center, and literacy center, just to name a few. These centers will draw expertise, in the educational field, to the campus and provide services to the local community, state, and region. For example, the science and math center will encourage K-12 students and teachers to come to campus and participate in the activities of the center, with the hope of having students enhance their interest in and knowledge of science and math. The center will be a place where in-service and pre-service teachers can develop resources and materials for their classrooms. This facility will be available to the public six days a week and during the evening.

There is no doubt that excitement will be centered around the new buillding; however, the facility will only be as effective as the people occupying it. I am comfortable saying that our students are some of the very best and the faculty are excellent. So, come on over, join the College of Education and become one of the outstanding new teachers in the country!

Humman and

 Communitry SciencesTI he College of Human and Community Sciences emphasizes the health, social, physical, and environmental dimensions of community life focusing on individuals and families across the lifespan. HCS encourages multidisciplinary approaches to health and social issues on a continuum of prevention to intervention.

HCS is the fastest growing college at the University of Nevada with the second largest number of students. Our students receive quality instruction and gain hands-on experience prior to becoming health workers, family nurse practitioners, social workers, child care providers, juvenile probation officers, nutritionists, and fitness managers. These are just a few of the many professions which HCS graduates pursue.

Two especially important events occurred within HCS during 1996-97 which had a particular positive impact on students. First, the Department of Criminal Justice moved from Arts and Science into HCS. This brought over 300 new students into HCS and afforded faculty and students enhanced opportunities for interdisciplinary teaching and research in such areas as youth at risk and community safety.

Also this year the Department of Health, Wellness, and Exercise Sciences was established. HWES blends the former departments of health science and recreation, physical education, and dance. HWES will provide campus and community leadership in the increasingly important areas of health and wellness.

This was another exciting year for the College of Human and Community Sciences. HCS is dedicated to making a difference in the lives of citizens throughout Nevada and the nation. We are preparing future generations of Nevadans to think critically and to address some of the most pressing health and social issues of our time. We touch people's lives.

Meidicine

The University of Nevada School of Medicine - now 27 years old with programs in Reno, Las Vegas and rural communities - is doing the primary job it was established to do: provide a medical education for Nevada's young people. Nevada residents, or students with close ties to the state, are given first priority for acceptance to medical school. We have now graduated 1,004 new physicians, 336 have returned to practice in the state, and many are still in residency training for their specialties.

Because primary care has always been our focus, we are pleased to be one of the top medical schools in the country for producing primary care physicians. We have earned three Bronze Achievement Awards and this year a Silver Achievement Award from the Academy of Family Physicians for the high percentage ( 27.7 percent) of students who choose family medicine. Add those who choose internal medicine and pediatrics and approximately 50 percent of our graduates choose the primary care specialties.

This year, I welcomed the Class of 2000 to our school; the first that will graduate in the twenty-first century. They will be dealing with a very different - and rapidly changing - health care environment than their predecessors and their faculty members, who are premier basic science and clinical researchers. Faculty research, which has been awarded national and international recognition by the scientific community, brought $$ 7.3$ million to the medical school in 1994-

The Class of 2000 is also the first to begin their education with the school's completely new curriculum, which focuses on generalist education and ambulatory care. It emphasizes problem solving collaboration and teamwork in the ambulatory setting, with the aim of keeping people out of the hospital. Students will learn the business realities in a managed care environment, and will be given the tools to cope with the challenges they meet while giving their patients the best care possible without losing sight of the cost containment. They will be well prepared to practice medicine in the twenty-first century.

Mines

The year 1996-1997 has been a productive and interesting year for the Mackay School of Mines.

One highlight is the rapid progress of the Ralph J. Roberts Center for Research in Economic Geology (CREG). The Center now has a director, distinguished economic geologist Dr. Tommy B. Thompson. Under Tommy's leadership the Center will continue to grow and flourish.

Professor Wallce Whiting has accepted the position of Chair of the Department of Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. Professor Whiting comes with considerable experience in chemical engineering education.

Students and faculty from Mackay attended MinExpo ' 96 in Las Vegas, and were duly impressed with modern mining and processing equipment. They also attended the National Mining Hall of Fame induction banquet, and were delighted to see inducted a very good friend of the School, Dr. Arthur Brant.

On November 1, 1996 the outstanding alumnus of the year was awarded to Ed Jucevic, volunteer coordinator for the Burrus mine. Ed has been the driving force behind the University acquisition of the mine. He has handled the paperwork, with considerable help from Richard Harris, At-torney-at-Law, including dealing with the previous owners, with the BLM, city and county, i.e. Ed has done a tremendous amount of legwork in order to bring the Burrus onstream as a full-fledged teaching mine. Ed also has handled most of the arrangements required to bring to the Burrus an impressive fleet of underground mining equipment from NTS, with considerable help from Bill Flangas. Finally, Ed arranges and coordinates the student work at the mine. The aquisition (initiated by Mark Cowan) and bringing into operation of the Burrus has been made possible through intense cooperation of multiple alumni. An additional alumnus who deserves mentioning in this context is Dennis Bryan, who performed the environmental assessment for the site.

"Students are responsible. Students are irresponsible. Students work hard. Students have it so much easier today. Engineering students are cool. No they're not, they're nerds.'

Engineering students are rightly described or slandered by these generalizations. Our students study hard, speak in code, can spout formulas, but they are also accomplished musicians and artists. For four years students read the comic strip by Tasha, a gifted cartoonist and artist who got her degree in electrical engineering. Like Jim, in mechanical engineering, our students ski, snowboard, hike, rock climb and camp. Many have histories of participating on high school athletic teams lettering in football, baseball, track, basketball, and tennis. Like Mei (computer science) and Adam (civil engineering) they care for their families, their friends and for their communities.
Clearly, students at the College of Engineering are not generalizations. They are people who are individuals. They've chosen well by pursuing engineering at the University of Nevada.

The Civil, Electrical and Mechanical Engineering Departments have been joined by the Computer Science Department at the college. All departments are commilted to excellence and to students. This year, the Civil Engineering Department boasts two new 50 ton shaking tables benefitting faculty and students in the Structures Program, and making it a premier facility in the nation. The Transportation, Pavements and Materials Program was chosen as one of five Superpave centers in the country - keeping company with Cal Berkeley and Purdue. Mechanical engineering students and faculty placed second in the 1995 "Human Powered Vechicle" competition hosted here on campus. Computer science has a steady influx of high school interns working with faculty. If you saw electrical engineering students and faculty on the Discovery Channel this year, it was probably some of the same students from the Lemelson Center for Invention, Innovation and Entrepreneurship who gave a presentation at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C. in November. What can I say? They are dedicated.

I suppose that's a generalization I can endorse: engineering students are extremely dedicated. It's a quality that is mirrored in our faculty, our staff, our alumni and friends who make up the community of the College of Engineering.

Business

The College of Business is commilted to being an educational and learning resource. 'To that end, the college is working closely with its students to insure they receive a quality education. In addition to classroom instruction, several aspects of this education are increasingly important for us. The first of these would be to give our students the chance to listen to business professionals speak to their classes and students organizations. Another aspect of this professional business contact is the mentoring that occurs between the professional and student chapters of business organizations.

A second aspect of our instructional efforts revolves around building our internship program. In the past several years we have built this program to the point that almost half of our graduating students have at least one internship prior to graduation. The companies they work for include the best of the firms in the Truckee Meadows and global firms such as Ford Motor Company and Coca Cola. We are proud of these internship contacts and will continue building these opportunities for our students.

The College of Business is also fortunate to have a very strong alumni chapter. The College of Business Alumni Association plays an important role in our efforts to raise money for the college. Equally important, the alumni have become an important source of ideas for us. We do alumni surveys to stay in touch with our former students, and to learn from them how to provide the best education to our current students. Our alumni are also increasingly active in our student recruiting efforts.

The goal of this effort is to have our current and former students help drive this college. We are also anxious for the greater community to provide ideas which will also drive the college. These two groups can assist the faculty in its instructional efforts to continue building a College of Business Administration which ranks with the best.

Congratulations on Your Graduation!

From the University of Nevada, Reno Alumni Association

Dear Graduates,
The 1997 edition of the Artemisia is a gift to you, compliments of the University of Nevada, Reno Alumni Association. The Alumni Association serves as an advisory liaison between the university and its alumni. It has many functions including generating volunteer, moral, and financial support for the university; keeping alumni in contact with the university and each other through a wide variety of programs; coordinating and implementing appropriate professional, career, personal, cultural, and educational services for alumni; and encouraging students to pursue educational goals at the Reno campus.

You can become involved with the Alumni Association immediately! We are always looking for good volunteers to work on our many committees and chapters. Much of the association's business is conducted through such committees as Homecoming, Alumni Ski Day, and Alumni Association Scholarships. In addition, you may be nominated to serve on the Alumni Council, the advisory board responsible for determining the course of action for the association.

The Alumni Association also maintains an extensive chapters program, which keeps expanding with respect to both geographical areas and special interests. Chapters play a vital role in keeping the lines of communication open between the association and alumni who live away from Northern Nevada.

Message From the Editor:

While working on the 1997 Artemisia, the staff had several goals
First, we wanted to create an archive of the history made during the 1996-1997 school year. As a result, newsworthy events, guests to campus, and even a natural disaster are documented in the book. Also included are some of the most important articles published in our sister publication the Sagebrush

Second, we faced the challenge of trying to create a symbolic picture album of student life on campus. One way we did this was by discarding the annual portrait seetion. A portrait section serves its purpose in a high school yearbook at a school with onetenth the population of our campus but is not appropriate in the archive of an institution. A portrait section in a university book this small with a student population as large as the U of N 's cannot be truly representative of any group.
Our third goal was to make the book personal and also make it useful as a reference hook for alumni in the future who want to remember the names of friends from the past. We accomplished this by including as many people's names as possible and including an index
The index is the largest ever to appear in the Artemisia. I hope this adrlition to the book will be appreciated and worth the headache. However, in many cases it is more a phonetic index than a literal one. If you don't see your name, fish around for a different spelling please! I must apologize for any misspellings and errors in the index. There was no way for us to determine which were the correct spellings when our only references were club and Greek phone lists which were often handwritten by random representatives and which likely contained mistakes.
Our fourth goal was to make this book a creative, stimulating, fun-to-read book. Well, the "yearhook commandments"' were thrown out the window, and Gremlins took over our layout program. Each section editor was encouraged to create a style for his/her section that they were proud of. The result was that the only consistent style throughout the hook is the copy font and folio style! Some yearbook pros may scoff at our book's amateurish ineonsistencies. However, we have accomplished our goal; our book is anything but boring to look at - the style changes every thirty pages!
*Thank you to my family: mother, Joyce; father, Richard; and twin sister, Amy. I love you! Mom and Dad, you're my heroes! Thank you for supporting me! Thank you Amy for constantly keeping me in touch with the real world... your stories and friendship keep me going. Thank you also to boyfriend-in-law James for keeping Amy happy

Many thanks to my new friends from the staff. 'Tara and phantom Chris - thank you for renewing my faith in perfect couples (you oughta be shot!) and for your perfect delivery, Tara, of the color section on time. Marygrace - thanks for the girl talks! Hank - thank you for putting up with my boring stories and singing at 4:00 in the morning and your $49+$ hour deadline marathon! Jeremy - thanks for the great pictures and keeping me company.... good luek with the snowboarding eluh too! Mike - thank you for the 10,000 impromptu "drop everything" rums to Super-K for pictures! Lisa - thanks for finishing one of the toughest sections in the book on time, and best of luck as a senator! Steve - thanks for filling the Arts section editor position so late in the semester and for the late-night computer help. Matt - thank you for your enthusiasm in completing the residential life section

Millions of thanks to the incredible Advertising department: Mike D., Laura, and Atsushi. Even though the Artemisia was written out of the by-laws and your jurisdiction, you didn't abandon us! Thank you for your help selling ads! In the area of ads.. thank you Melissa L. for your incredible plot to get more ads, and thank you Mike R. for your ad sales.

Thank you to Wally G. (photo editor) at the Sagebrush for desperately needed lastminute photos! Also thanks to John Curtis (editor) and the rest of the Sagebrush staff for keeping me entertained via intereom on production nights.
*I've questioned my priorities constantly throughout the past year and wondered if they were appropriately focused in large part on this book. I still don't know the answer, hut I do carry guilt for neglecting significant people in my life. My sincerest apologies to my family - I'm sorry I wasn't around you much this year! l've missed you! My apologies to the friends l've ignored this year especially Jen R. and Stefanie S. My apologies to my professors for missing so many classes - now you know why. I'm sorry, and thank you for not failing me! I also regret neglecting my studies, health, activities, and other organizations... for what? Twohundred pages of history that I ean peruse when I'm old so I can fondly reminisce about my college days and remember what the world around me was like? I'd like to think this makes it worthwhile... but it wasn't worthwhile unless my fellow students see it as such too.
I wish I could say this year was easier than last - it should have been. I do have to thank my incredible staff for making my "editor" job easier. The section editors very competently completed their layouts and used their creativity in contributing to the book. However overall, the headaches of having to be the business manager for the staff and spending, advertising coordinator, photo editor, and section editor for the organizations far outweighed my bliss at having few mistakes to eorrect editorially. Note to future editors: get a business manager, hire an ad manager, assign a photo editor, and don't take a section yourself! Maybe then you'll have a life. The only reason I survived is beeause of the friendships with my fabulous staff members, my friends, and my family. Thank you!
*The question that faces every editor the last night of production remains for me to answer, "would I do it again?"' The answer to this question would likely also answer whether it was worthwhile. Fortunately, I don't have to answer this question. The extent of my participation next year has been determined by external eircumstances - I won't be here next fall; I'll be studying abroad. Honestly though, I think I'll miss working on the Artemisia. ['ve made new friends, learned new skills, tested my boundaries, and challenged myself beyond my own expectations. While I'm exploring the rainforests, culture, and lifestyle of Costa Rica next year, I can't help but antieipate that I will be thinking about the U of N and wondering how the yearbook is going... maybe l'll send the staff a postcard:)
